Solution without a problem

Proposition 22 is simply divisive and punitive

Many believe that if Proposition 22 on the March 7 ballot fails, it would legalize gay marriages in California. That's simply not true.

Under state law, which this page supports, gay marriages are not legal in California. True, there are laws on domestic partnership that allow gay couples to receive employment benefits from state agencies. But the actual marriage between people of the same sex is not sanctioned by the state. Proposition 22 wouldn't change that one bit.

Proponents of this proposition say it's needed because other states might legalize same-sex marriages, and then California would be forced to recognize them. But no other states have legalized gay marriages. Efforts in Hawaii and Vermont have been sidetracked.

CAMPAIGN 2000

Lawmakers in those states have instead opted for stronger domestic partnership protections. The attack on the sanctity of marriage that Proposition 22 supporters envision simply doesn't exist, except in the mind's eye of those who perceive gay rights as a battleground in an American cultural war.

We think Proposition 22 is a solution in search of a problem. So why was it brought forward? While supporters and opponents may argue about legal matters, we believe this is largely an anti-gay referendum. The initiative process is being used in this case to single out a group of people for scorn. Proposition 22 serves to inflame tensions, to drive a wedge between people rather than accomplish anything substantive. If it passes, nothing will change from a legal standpoint, but divisiveness in our culture over homosexuality will increase.

That's not what most people want. While a majority of Americans oppose same-sex marriages, polls show that an even larger majority — 7 out of 10 in one recent survey — believe there are far more pressing issues than this. And when asked their opinions on whether a federal law banning same-sex marriages was necessary, unnecessary or if they were unsure, respondents were split three ways almost equally.

Clearly, same-sex marriage isn't an issue the American public wants to embrace right now. It's a question filled with great uncertainty. Even in the gay and lesbian community, there's no clamor to change California's law against gay marriages.

Fortunately, whether California should change its law banning gay marriages is not in question. That law stands no matter what happens in the March 7 election. And we don't advocate changing that law. It's a debate whose time has not come.

We don't buy the argument that Proposition 22 must be passed to forestall gay marriages. The two states that once moved toward legalizing same-sex marriages are now moving away from them. To pass a law like this now in California — the most diverse place on the planet — would simply be punitive. Using the initiative process to advance the cause of intolerance is wrong. Vote No on Proposition 22.

The fading Reform Party

Squabbling and defections threaten survival

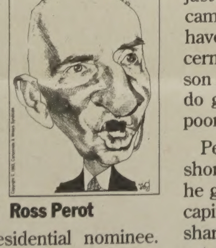
American humorist Will Rogers once quipped that he belonged to no organized political party, adding puckishly: "I'm a Democrat." Imagine what fun Rogers would have today over the rapidly disintegrating Reform Party.

Created by Texas billionaire Ross Perot, the Reform Party has been beset by internal problems since its inception eight years ago. But recent squabbling among party members and last week's defection of Minnesota Gov. Jesse Ventura raise questions about its very survival.



Ross Perot

In bailing out, Ventura, the party's highest-ranking elected official, cited the constant bickering and the prospect that arch-conservative Pat Buchanan would be the party's presidential nominee. The following day in Nashville, party chairman and Ventura ally Jack Gargan was ousted by party delegates, prompting a shouting match and scuffling between rival factions. Police were summoned and threatened to shut down the party proceedings.

The next 24 hours saw New York tycoon Donald Trump take himself out of the running for president under the Reform Party banner. Like Ventura, Trump concluded the party had become too dysfunctional to mount a credible presidential campaign. Noting that it "includes a Klansman, Mr. (David) Duke, a neo-Nazi, Mr. Buchanan, and a Communist, Ms. (Lenora) Fulani," Trump added: "This is company I do not wish to keep."

This wreckage would seem to favor Buchanan, who has kept a low profile of late. If he becomes the party's nominee, he will qualify for $12.6 million in federal matching funds. This assumes, of course, that Perot doesn't get the itch to get back into the saddle and come riding to the rescue of his party.

That scenario was played out four years ago when Perot remained aloof just long enough for Richard Lamm to campaign for the nomination and nearly have it within his grasp. Then, a "concerned" Ross suddenly tossed his Stetson into the ring and the former Colorado governor was shunted aside like a poor relation at a debutante ball.

Perot's presidential bid in 1996 fell far short of his feisty '92 campaign, when he garnered 19 percent of the vote. By capitalizing on voter discontent, the sharp-tongued Texan siphoned enough votes from then-President Bush to help assure Bill Clinton's victory. Four years ago, Perot's populist act had worn so thin he was generally discounted as a crank.

Why should voters be any more enthusiastic about yet another Perot presidential candidacy, especially with GOP hopefuls John McCain and George W. Bush and Democratic challenger Bill Bradley all competing so strenuously for the cherished role of reformer? That giant sucking sound that Ross Perot popularized could prove to be the Reform Party's death rattle.

The ethics of teaching how to cheat

William Raspberry

THE WASHINGTON POST

"Michael Jordan leans into Laron Profit, shoving one forearm into his back while using the other to pin Profit's left arm to his side. Jordan then invites the Washington Wizards rookie to attempt a move toward the basket, knowing Profit is trapped.

" 'If you're subtle, you can get away with it,' Jordan whispers when Profit protests that he'd be called for a foul if he tried the same tactic."

That's from the lead of a recent Washington Post sports story on the efforts of Jordan, retired basketball superstar and now head of basketball operations for the local NBA franchise, to help move the Wizards toward respectability. The best player ever to play the game was demonstrating some of the tricks of the craft.

And that's all I saw in the story until a few days later when Richard Hayden, in a letter to the editor, expressed his outrage. He listed some recent lapses of professional athletes — from baseballer John Rocker's racist and xenophobic outburst to footballer Ray Lewis' arrest for murder. Then:

"But Mr. Jordan's is perhaps the most distressing. In the first paragraph, we see this hero to many young people teach a player how to cheat — that is, how he did it when he played. In the second paragraph, he tells the player how to escape detection by a referee so as not to be called for committing a foul. I guess it's OK to break the rules as long as you're not caught. Are these the examples we want to hold up to our youth?"

My first thought when I saw Hayden's letter was that he should climb down from his ivory tower. My second thought amounts to a raging argument inside my own head.

Of course cheating isn't nice, the cynical part of me says, but it has become an ordinary and accepted part of the game. Well, some games, anyway. Not tennis and not golf. Maybe not most sports at the amateur level. But in big-time collegiate and professional basketball and football, cheating has become an aspect of "technique." Indeed, cheating seems to have developed its own code of ethics: You can hold an opponent, or give him an illegal shove, or pull him into you to make it appear he's the one committing the offense. But you may not strike him or attempt to hurt him, even out of sight of the referee.

Jordan's "if you're subtle" advice seems to be within the code.

But should it be? If deliberate violation of the rules is acceptable at the professional level, then how can it not be emulated at the collegiate level — and, if there, doesn't it become a part of the "technique" taught by high school and amateur coaches? What, to raise Hayden's question, are the implications of adults teaching children how to cheat and get away with it?

It's not a trivial question. One of the reasons we tout athletics and urge our children to participate is our belief that athletic competition helps prepare them for success in the rest of their lives. Not just battles, but political, professional and corporate victories, are won on the playing field. Can we blink at cheating — teach cheating — in sports and not expect the lessons to carry over?

It's important to make clear that we're not talking about merely stretching the rules. Athletes will routinely test the officials to see how closely they will call a particular game. If the referee establishes that he will call "touch fouls," the fans may object but the game will be cleaner. If the official decides to "let 'em play," the play is likely to become a lot rougher — "more physical," as the euphemism has it.

That's legitimate — like "creative" deductions on your income tax returns, to see how closely the IRS referees are calling the game.

Cheating is something else again — it is the deliberate violation of rules for personal advantage while trying to avoid detection. In the IRS analogy, it is lying on your tax returns, under-reporting income, over-reporting expenses, claiming gifts to charity that were never made. Accountants who countenance such lies can find themselves in trouble; those who counsel such lies can go to jail.

How much more ethical is it for coaches — especially adult coaches of children — to counsel their charges in the techniques of holding, hooking, flopping, and otherwise attempting to deceive those whose job is to enforce the rules? Does it matter if your kids lose because you're the only coach in the league who doesn't teach cheating? What long-term lessons and attitudes are being passed along?

Richard Hayden asks a good question.

Weighing a McCain-Reform fusion

Robert D. Novak

THE CHICAGO SUN-TIMES

Early on the morning after John McCain's rout of George W. Bush in the New Hampshire primary, I received a telephone call from Russell Verney in Dallas. It was the first unsolicited contact from the former Reform Party national chairman in my four years of dealing with him, and what he said could profoundly impact the 2000 election and the American political landscape for years ahead.

Verney told me that McCain's campaign for the Republican presidential nomination carried the banner of "reform" hoisted in 1992 by Perot. So had Bill Bradley's quest for the Democratic nomination, Verney added. But Bradley lost in New Hampshire, while McCain won in a landslide.

Verney, a former New Hampshire Democratic operative who is now Perot's political lieutenant and spokesman, was doing more than claiming vindication of his boss. He made clear in a second conversation that I initiated a week later that he sees "a real chance" for McCain to be the nominee of both the Republican and Reform parties. It is obvious that Perot has soured on Buchanan as his successor in leading the party that Verney calls "Ross Perot's gift to the American people."

This is contingent, Perot and Verney understand, on McCain winning the Republican nomination. McCain has no inclination to imitate his idol, Theodore Roosevelt, in his party-splitting bolt from which the GOP never quite recovered. Nor would McCain care to serve out his Senate term as a nonparty independent, stripped of his Commerce Committee chairmanship.

But should he be the Republican nominee, McCain is willing to embrace Perot. "We would support a fusion deal like that," Mike Murphy, McCain's campaign consultant told me.

Nor would McCain face serious procedural impediments to become the double nominee. "It would not be hard to do," Verney told me. Assuming the Republican nomination is decided by mid-March, Perot and Verney would have plenty of time to guarantee the nomination for McCain.

The Reform Party's requirement that its candidate win placement on all state ballots, requiring arduous labor by Buchanan, would be automatically fulfilled by McCain as the Republican candidate.

> The Reform Party's requirement that its candidate win placement on all state ballots, requiring arduous labor by Buchanan, would be automatically fulfilled by McCain as the Republican candidate.

A McCain-Reform fusion would eliminate the fear of Republicans that Buchanan on the Reform ticket could drain up to 10 percent of their voters — maybe more angry conservatives if McCain defeats Bush. But the alliance would make the Republican establishment irrelevant.

It would also be a bitter rejection for Buchanan, who left his ancestral party in an attempt to wed Perot's reformers with his own populist conservative followers. Hoping for Perot's blessing, Buchanan sought a private telephone chat with the founder. But Perot, once among the most garrulous of American public figures, communicates politically only through Verney. He declines contact with Buchanan or any other suitor for the Reform nomination on grounds that it would imply his endorsement.

In truth, however, Perot's attitude toward Buchanan is more complicated than that. It has chilled since publication last year of Buchanan's book "A Republic, Not An Empire," a serious history of U.S. foreign policy with a controversial view of World War II that has been outrageously misinterpreted as pro-Hitler. Perot's concern, according to sources close to him, is not what Buchanan wrote in the book but that he failed to defend himself adequately with an emphatic denunciation of Hitler.

Perot does not want to be embarrassed by the likes of Donald Trump or Jesse Ventura as his successor, and Buchanan may now have entered that prohibited category. Perot likes McCain for lots of reasons: a fellow Naval Academy alumnus, a cautious tax cutter and aggressive budget cutter, a campaign finance reformer — and, of course, a foe of the Bushes. His only problem for protectionist Perot is that he is a free trader, but Verney notes with approval that lately, McCain has talked about "fair" trade.

Whither the Buchanan Brigades? Buchanan could ask Howard Phillips to step aside as perpetual nominee of the Constitution Party, but that would not give him the $15 million federal subsidy coming to the Reform Party. Not since the 1940s and 1950s would the Right be so skimpily represented in a national campaign. It could all happen if McCain wins in South Carolina's primary Saturday.

Carlos Montalvo, 82; active in early days of Chicano movement

By Jack Williams, STAFF WRITER

In the early days of a Chicano movement known more for its passion than patience, Carlos Montalvo furthered the cause by bridging the gap between militants and moderates.

He challenged injustices at the workplace. He helped open doors for Hispanic educators and administrators. And, in his role with the Small Business Administration, he provided loans to encourage Hispanic entrepreneurs.

Carlos Montalvo

"Carlos was a big promoter of pooling our resources in the Chicano movement, of going forward as one at a time when there was a lack of unity," recalled Pete Chacon, a fellow activist who went on to serve in the state Assembly from 1970 to 1992.

Mr. Montalvo, a lifelong San Diegan, died Feb. 8 at his home in San Carlos. He was 82.

The cause of death was complications from diabetes, said his daughter, Celeste Montalvo-Jackson.

Beginning in 1967, as a member of the San Diego Mayor's Committee for Jobs, Mr. Montalvo helped place newly trained minority residents in the San Diego job market by going directly to employers.

Mr. Montalvo also appealed to the San Diego Unified School District to hire more Hispanic teachers to serve as role models for Spanish-speaking students.

"Carlos and others demanded that the district hire its first Mexican-American principal," Chacon said. "The response was, they didn't know if there were any candidates with master's degrees. When I proved that I had one, Carlos and other leaders presented me as a candidate, and I was vice principal at Sherman Elementary School for a year before I ran for political office."

In a letter of thanks to Mr. Montalvo for his role on the mayor's committee for jobs, Chacon wrote, "A few years ago it would have been unthinkable for anyone to suppose that representatives from the Mexican-American community could influence a large organization in the hiring of members from minority groups."

In 1969, Mr. Montalvo and Chacon protested a San Diego Gas & Electric Co. advertisement that they and other Chicano activists felt was demeaning to Hispanics.

"Some of the young people wanted to burn the place down, but we said, 'No but you can picket,'" Chacon said.

Eventually, with the help of lawyer Ramon Castro, Chacon and Mr. Montalvo met with SDG&E management, which issued an apology and agreed to hire more Mexican-Americans.

"Carlos, Alex Torres and I held in check the wishes of the young people, who organized as the Brown Berets and had a lot more zeal than good sense," Chacon recalled. "We knew we weren't going to get anywhere with Draconian measures."

Torres, a retired educator who worked with Mr. Montalvo on the mayor's committee for jobs, said, "Carlos had a very open personality and could easily persuade people. He was always working, very visible, and had a lot of credibility with the (Hispanic) people. He backed his words with action."

Mr. Montalvo assumed leadership roles in virtually every Hispanic civic and social organization in the San Diego area during his career as a draftsman, loan officer and community college educator.

Through the GI Forum, he sought to ensure that Mexican-American veterans received the benefits due them from the Veterans Administration. He was active in the MAAC Project, the San Diego County Businessman's Forum and the Southeast San Diego Rotary Club.

Serving on the board of directors of Project SER, Mr. Montalvo championed job development programs.

Mr. Montalvo reached children in his role as a part-time group worker and Spanish interpreter for the Neighborhood House Center, an anti-poverty project funded by the Economic Opportunity Commission of San Diego County.

"His heart was in improving the community and helping Hispanics get ahead in life," Montalvo-Jackson said. "He was always involved in meetings, and now I understand why he was gone so much. He wanted a better life for us and to provide for us, which he did."

Mr. Montalvo, who grew up in Barrio Logan, was the great-grandson of Augustin Vicente Zamorano, one of the earliest printers in California. In 1987, Zamorano Fine Arts Academy in southeastern San Diego was dedicated in memory of Mr. Montalvo's great-grandfather.

Mr. Montalvo's mother, Minnie Montalvo, was among the first Spanish-speaking interpreters in the San Diego court system, a role she filled for 45 years.

Mr. Montalvo graduated from San Diego High School in 1936 and took several vocational courses in mill and cabinet work while beginning an apprenticeship in the specialty.

While being interviewed in recent years as part of an oral history project by Joan Lindgren, a San Diego educator and writer, Mr. Montalvo related his boyhood in the barrio.

"Carlos told me that growing up here, poor and Hispanic, he never had the courage to enter Marston's store (a major downtown department store)," Lindgren said. "But when he came home on leave from the Navy, wearing his uniform, he made up his mind to go there. He walked around the block a few times, then went in and right out again.

"He felt the uniform empowered him to go in but he didn't feel comfortable there."

After serving in the Navy during World War II, Mr. Montalvo worked for the next 22 years as a draftsman, detailer, estimator and buyer for various companies that specialized in wood products.

From 1956 to 1968, he taught mill-cabinet apprentices at San Diego City College. Many of his students won local, state and regional mill-cabinet contests over the years.

Mr. Montalvo also furthered his education with adult education courses in public speaking, investments, economics, sociology and political science.

His final job was as a loan officer with the Small Business Administration in San Diego.

Survivors include daughters, Patricia Gallipeau of San Diego, Christine Leibold and Celeste Montalvo-Jackson, both of El Cajon, and Cathy Padilla of Chula Vista; sisters, Connie Sisto of San Diego, Carmen Hitt of Kingman, Ariz., and Bettie Howie of Lakeside; a brother, Manuel of San Diego; seven grandchildren; and one great-grandchild.

A memorial service was held yesterday at Goodbody Mortuary chapel. Burial followed at Holy Cross Cemetery.

Wesley Arlen Tidwell, 71; U-T pressman, coach of prize-winning jumping frogs

By Jack Williams
STAFF WRITER

Riding Brahma bulls on the southwestern rodeo circuit was a bone-breaking adventure for Navy veteran Wesley Arlen Tidwell.

After a few years, and more than a few injuries, Mr. Tidwell gravitated to safer pursuits. Among them: operating newspaper presses and coaching prize-winning frogs in jumping contests at the Del Mar Fairgrounds.

Mr. Tidwell, who retired as a pressman at the Union-Tribune Publishing Co. in 1990, died Feb. 4 at Grossmont Hospital. He was 71.

The cause of death was complications from a stroke, said his daughter Sherrill Sinclair.

Beginning in the mid-1970s, Mr. Tidwell entered his first of several Jumping Frog Jamborees at the Del Mar Fairgrounds to benefit cancer research at Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation. He won various ribbons over the years, coaxing the nimble creatures in competitions that involved three consecutive jumps.

Mr. Tidwell developed cancer of the tongue in the mid-1980s. But he underwent successful surgery and the disease did not disrupt his career, Sinclair said.

As a pressman, he worked over the years at the Las Vegas Sun, the Daily Californian in El Cajon and the Union-Tribune Publishing Co. when it published the San Diego Tribune and The San Diego Union, Sinclair said.

After retiring, Mr. Tidwell left his midtown San Diego home and settled in Klamath Falls, Ore., where he joined a friend in managing a duplex.

Born in Clovis, N.M., Mr. Tidwell moved with his family as a youth to Albuquerque. He was employed there in his teens at the Albuquerque Journal, then joined the Navy after his 17th birthday as World War II was winding down.

Mr. Tidwell was recalled to active duty during the Korean War and served aboard ship before being released from active duty as a seaman first class.

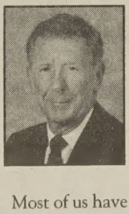
"He fancied himself as a cowboy," said his sister, Nelda Hill. "He was strictly a cowboy for several years, but broke several bones, including an arm." Eventually, Mr. Tidwell gave up the ups and downs of life as a cowboy and moved to Las Vegas, where he devoted full time to the newspaper business. While living in Las Vegas he made newspaper headlines by rescuing a boy who had been playing with matches from a flaming car, Sinclair said.

Later, while living in San Diego, Mr. Tidwell often visited the small, remote community of Dogpatch, near Campo. He once held the title of the community's honorary mayor, Sinclair said.

"His favorite saying was, 'If friends were money, I'd be a millionaire,'" she said.

Survivors include his daughters, Sherrill Sinclair of San Diego, Sharon White of San Antonio, Texas, Nelda Lucero of Albuquerque, N.M., and Linda Smith of White Deer, Texas; sons, Kirk of San Antonio, Texas, Carl Bell of Albuquerque, and Douglas Canon of Terre Haute, Ind.; a sister, Nelda Hill of Albuquerque; a brother, Malcolm of Pine Top, Ariz.; 11 grandchildren; and 11 great-grandchildren.

Services are scheduled for 11 a.m. Feb. 24 at Fort Rosecrans National Cemetery.



Let's Talk About It!

"FEELINGS"

Most of us have found ourselves feeling out of place, inadequate or uncomfortable when someone we know dies. We often aren't sure what to do to help or comfort the family — and may even feel guilty because we are unable to match the grief of those closest to the deceased.

These feelings aren't unusual. It is important to remember that the sympathy and understanding given at this time are of great value. Attending the funeral and offering your friendship during the months to come will be of greater value than you may realize. The love and concern you give will be appreciated in a way you may not fully understand until you, yourself, have experienced a similar loss.

There are many appropriate ways to express your sympathy. If there are questions we can answer for you at any time, please call a member of our staff.

Thank you getting back so quickly regarding Charles Agustus Grain.

I am doing genealogy research for my wife Jane's line. Charles Augustus Grain and his wife Caroline "Carrie" Stockdale are Jane's great grandparents. Jane's grandmother is Nellie Roszena Grain b. 11 Jul 1889. I will send you an invite to the ancestry.com tree so you can see all the detail that we have so far.

Do you descend from Charles Agustus Grain (Jr.) b. 17 May 1894 ?

Would like to know more of the Grain line going back.

We have some photos of the Grain's. Attached is headstone here in San Diego.
